Lamberg: Phase Two stresses continuity

By MARY GLYNN
Current Staff Writer

Bob Lamberg, who recently announced his candidacy for student president, stresses the importance of continuing the work the Central Council is doing this year.

A two-year council member, Lamberg feels that the student government, in the past six months, has provided students with many benefits, such as repaving the front driveway, establishing "a grievance committee that has been responsive and responsible to student grievances," and the course evaluation project.

His platform, Phase Two, is a collection of projects that Lamberg and running-mate Pam Schnebelen --currently chairman of the council grievance committee--felt were necessary and beneficial for day and Evening College students.

The following goals, in addition to a semesterly course evaluation, have been selected:

1. The Lounge Annex must be retained for student use.

In a survey taken by the council last spring, many students requested a recreation area be available in the new student union.

However, due to lack of space, these facilities will not be available when the University Center opens in September.

There are currently plans to reconvert the lounge into office space.

"We hope to stop this change and equip the lounge for recreational activity," Lamberg said.

2. Student employment should be used whenever possible in the student union and multi-purpose building instead of hiring outside help.

3. Initiation of a book rental program in the bookstore must be pushed.

4. There must be a better advisement program for undergraduates and students with undeclared majors.

5. A tutoring program for day school students, similar to that run by the Evening College, should be started.

6. The campus should be beautified through the acquisition of paintings and other art objects.

7. The new multi-purpose building facilities should be available at times that day and evening students may use them.

8. The colleges and schools, along with the University Senate, must be urged to pass the D-F option.

The success of Phase Two also requires the correlation of council and senate activities while remaining a separate body acting as the voice of the students.

Lamberg, currently secretary and vice-president of Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity, includes among his credits a two terms on the University Program Board, membership in the American Chemical Society and in the Biology Club.

Miss Schnebelen, a candidate for the vice-presidency, has served on the council for two years on the curriculum committee.

Phase Two, according to the candidates, is intended to continue the council's current activities and initiate additional projects.

University's financial distress cited by board president Smith

The University is in a "serious financial hole" requiring an increase in operating funds for the next fiscal year, according to Pleasant R. Smith, president of the Board of Curators.

"The need at the University of Missouri is critical and that we hope some plan can be arrived at to finance these needs," he said.

Smith spoke last Thursday at a luncheon meeting of the Downtown Kiwanis Club at the Mayfair Hotel.

Smith said the university has increased enrollment by some 3,000 students during the past two years, but the state appropriation to operate the four-campus university has remained the same, $80.7 million, for each of those years.

In view of climbing enrollment, no increase in state funds, and inflation, he said the university's financial predicament is obvious.

The current fiscal situation already has forced the university to cut-back or eliminate some educational programs, he said, adding that the institution has been unable to improve existing offerings, and has been unable to start some badly needed new programs, such as some key graduate programs on the rapidly developing St. Louis campus.

The University of Missouri granted almost 9,000 degrees in 1970, and the figure represents individuals who have reached high levels of competence in chosen fields, "who can make unique and special contributions to society, to Missouri, and to the future," Smith asserted.

He added that such degrees are proof that the University of Missouri is a sound investment for the people of the state, "an investment that pays, not costs, in the long-run."

Stressing that the university must continue to grow with the demands and needs of society, he said, "The level of services the university can provide Missouri is related to its financial condition." If fiscal conditions conspire to bring university operations to a standstill, he continued, "it will take years to catch up with progress made up to now," which "will only hurt the people of the state."

Dan Crane has been appointed food service manager of the student union, currently under construction and scheduled to open in the fall.

Crane, 42, was most recently manager of the restaurant at the Cheshire Inn and before that was a buyer and quality control manager for Dobbs House.

His primary duties will be menu planning, purchasing, scheduling, quality control, recruiting and training employees, and providing luncheon and banquet service.

There will be two main dining areas in the new union--a cafeteria and fast food area with a seating capacity of 400, and a snack bar with seating for 450.

Armbruster asserts importance of PhD program in chemistry

By MARGARET JENSEN
Current Staff Writer

The chemistry department has finally reached its goal with the addition of a doctorate program this fall, department chairman Dr. Charles Armbruster said.

He felt that the addition was an important step for UMSL.

Refuting a recent St. Louis Post-Dispatch editorial describing the new addition of a doctorate program as unnecessary due to an overabundance of chemistry PhDs, Armbruster asserted this was only a temporary situation resulting from a change in draft regulations three years ago. The new law, according to Armbruster, stipulated that chemistry graduate students could be drafted if they had less than two years of graduate studies, so consequently, only about 2500 chemists would get PhDs next year, contrasting with the 3800 in the U.S. this year.

He claimed that the addition is not so much intended to increase the number of graduates in chemistry as to take some of the load off the other three university campuses, none of which has received recognition for their chemistry departments, he added.

There are four important advantages attending the existence of a chemistry doctorate program here, he asserted.

Since the campus is located in one of the largest chemical centers in the country, many of the big St. Louis corporations in need of chemical researchers can turn to PhDs from this campus.

He also asserted that UMSL probably has the largest chemistry department of any other university in the country lacking a doctorate program.

In addition, it is difficult to attract and retain really fine chemistry professors without providing them with graduate students to teach, he contended.

Finally, Armbruster cited the fact that chemistry labs are at present being taught by undergraduate students. Establishment of the doctorate program will allow graduate students who hold teaching certificates to fill those positions, he explained.

A small enrollment next year is anticipated for the graduate program because it started so late this year, but the enrollment is expected to increase in the future.

The chemistry department has been evaluated by many committees from all over the country in order to gain acceptance for the doctorate program, and it is naturally regarded as a big step for them.

Jazz still strong in age of rock

By DARRELL SHOULTS
Current Managing Editor

Is it possible for the members of this generation, whose heads are supposedly in tune only with rock music, to get into and enjoy jazz?

This question was posed to Terry Kippenberger, bassist of the St. Louis Jazz Quartet, the group that presented its second concert in little more than a month here Friday, April 23.

"We wondered that ourselves," said Kippenberger, referring to the reaction his group would get, "when we started this concert series."

The group had little trouble turning on students in grade schools and junior highs. "Grade school kids' head are still open," said Kip, "so it's easy for them to dig jazz. It was college-age people that we were wondering about."

It seems, however, that their fears were groundless. "In every school we played at, except one, we've been hired back on the spot. We've got standing ovations wherever we've been. Kids have really dug what we're doing."

What the jazz quartet is doing is mainly communicating. "That's right," the bass player agreed,

"we just try to communicate. Of course, there's a certain amount of education involved when we play for students, but our big thing is communication."

"And we don't play club dates," said Kip, referring to night club or restaurant gigs. "There's no way you can communicate in that atmosphere, unless you're in a good jazz club and you have maybe a two or three-week stand to play."

"You see, we don't play for any one audience. We play things the way we think they should be played." Kippenberger said he feels that his college audiences are not only jazz buffs, but are also those same students who are into the Led Zeppelin-Black Sabbath hard rock thing.

"I think jazz is heading for a major resurgence. Groups like Chicago and Blood, Sweat and Tears are basically jazz musicians that are playing jazz-rock." In addition, certain established jazz musicians like Miles Davis have allowed their music to grow and be influenced by rock music trends and innovations (for proof, give a listen to Davis' Bitches' Brew or Miles Davis at Fillmore).

The quartet, consisting of vocalist Jeanne Trevor, pianist Ken Palmer, drummer Charles Payne, and Kippenberger, plans to play gigs on the West Coast in the near future. In addition, they are looking to engagements with a number of symphonies in large cities and to recording an album for A & M Records, the company which produced the Tijuana Brass' albums.

AOJ director honored

Dr. Gordon E. Misner, professor and director of the Administration of Justice program, has been elected president of the American Academy of Criminal Justice Science.

The academy is composed of criminal justice and police scientists from the United States, Canada and Formosa.

Misner was installed for a one-year term at the organization's recent annual meeting in Seattle, Wash.

The Administration of Justice program was recently awarded a $52,623 grant by the Missouri Law Enforcement Assistance Council of the Missouri Department of Community Affairs.

It will provide funds to help underwrite the four-member AOJ faculty, according to Misner.

He added that the AOJ program, begun in September 1968, has grown 701 per cent since its inception. Presently, 584 students are enrolled in AOJ courses, including 73 majors.

The majority of AOJ members on the St. Louis campus are "pre-service" people who have no previous professional experience in law enforcement or allied fields, Misner said.

Rivers to head pilot program

Dr. Wendell Rivers has been appointed director of a program to train undergraduates as paraprofessional-type mental health specialists, financed by a five-year, $245,083 National Institute of Mental Health grant.

Rivers will be a member of the psychology faculty and staff psychologist in the Center of Community and Metropolitan Studies.

He has been assistant professor of psychology and chairman of the Department of Behavioral Sciences at Meramec Community College.

The pilot program will prepare 75 undergraduates, mostly from disadvantaged backgrounds, for careers with mental health and allied human service agencies. They will be prepared to fill positions that previously required post-graduate training.

Trainees, social and behavioral science majors, will complete regular degree requirements in major fields, as well as a prescribed core of social science courses, several related interdisciplinary offerings, and will attend a special seminar series.

Between the end of the junior year and graduation, each will obtain up to 900 hours of supervised field training with a cooperative agency.

No new degrees will be created here as a result of the training program.

Tickets available

Season tickets for the Mizzou Football Tigers' home games are available through the UMSL Ticket Agency. The price is $18 for the six games; orders and money must be received before the end of the semester.

Tickets for Tom Jones' concert to be held on June 4, at 8:30 p.m. at the Arena will be offered at a $1 reduction for groups of 50 or more.

Orders are also being accepted for St. Louis Symphony season tickets. Prices are $12 for 12

Thursday evening concerts, $10 for 12 Friday afternoon concerts, and $12 for 24 Saturday evening concerts.

Tickets are also available for performances of Anthony Newley and Buddy Hackett, at the American Theatre April 27 through May 16. There will be no ticket price reduction for these performances.

For further information, contact Mrs. Bernice Miner, room 206, Administration building, or call 453-5211.

Sharp loses MISL contest

Bill Sharpe, Young Democrat state chairman and campus president, was defeated last weekend in a bid for the governorship of the Missouri Intercollegiate State Legislature (MISL).

Carlene Layton, Dale Cheswick, and Sharpe travelled to Jefferson City for the MISL legislative session which considered mock bills to lessen the penalties for possession of marijuana, in support of the United Nations, and a resolution to turn MISL into a lobbying group to represent college students' interests in the State of Missouri.

Students interested in learning more about the Young Democrats or MISL may contact Cheswick at 837-0578, or attend the next Young Democrat meeting May 3.

COMMENTARY: Editorials and Opinions

Mud-slinging clarifies nothing

As the April 30 deadline for filing Central Council/University Senate candidacy approaches, we can expect a heightening of the typical campaign rhetoric and sloganeering. If there is any competition at all, it should be stiff.

However, a campaign is theoretically intended to clarify issues, especially regarding the individual candidates' positions in relation to those issues, not to further muddy the waters.

Certainly any contest can engender enmities, but mud-slinging doesn't contribute to a process of clarification; it detracts from it.

Supposedly, college students are discerning enough to make judgments on the basis of facts, without requiring anti-rational stimuli, such as mud-slinging. The candidates may suspect differently, that college students may be deluded-distracted from the actual issues--by a good rousing dose of name-calling and accusations. They could be right.

Nearly every campaign comes to involve some element of mud-slinging, and there's no evidence yet that this campaign will engender more than the ordinary.

On the other hand, it might be a good idea to point out the temptation in advance, and counsel the candidates to just keep it cool.

As in previous springs, the annual Greek Week presented campus fraternities and sororities to festoon the campus with posters of all sorts.

Above factionalism?

Dear Editor,

Let's clear the air a little bit! As the present chairman of the Central Council Curriculum Committee, I feel compelled to address myself to two statements found in the April 22nd edition of the Current.

In that issue, it was reported that John Oleski, a current candidate for student body president, maintains that he is responsible for "initiating the Course-Teacher Evaluation system" and getting the D-F option on the Athletic Fee Hike Referendum. While these statements might be partially true, they could be very misleading.

If Mr. Oleski is indeed responsible for putting the D-F option on the March ballot, then I hope he is willing to accept the consequences. The idea of a D-F option originated with John Heithaus, a member of the Curriculum Committee, and the whole concept is being investigated by the committee.

I am sure the students realize that changes in the grading policy of a University cannot take place over night. Before such an option can even be presented to the University Senate, the opinions of the various Deans of the University's schools and colleges must be sought, the Senate's Curriculum Committee must be contacted and the mechanics of the problem must be discussed with the Admissions office.

The Central Council Curriculum Committee was in the process of doing these things when the issue appeared on the referendum. Some of the members of the Senate--seeing the option on the ballot--assumed that this ground work had already been done. Thus, the issue made its way to the floor of the Senate. The arguments that ensued served only to alienate the Central Council and the University Senate. In order for such policies as a D-F option to be established, it is essential that the students and faculty be able to work together. How can we expect the faculty to listen to us when we flaunt irresponsibility before their eyes?

By prematurely putting the D-F option up for a student vote, the Curriculum Committee's work on the issue has been severely hampered. The students at UMMSL deserve results rather than promises and I, for one, would like to vote on an issue and see it come about rather than see it on a ballot and graduate without hearing about it again.

After reading the article about Mr. Oleski, any students may be under the impression that he is to be given credit for the Course and Teacher Evaluation conducted last week. The idea of student evaluation of courses and faculty has been kicked around this campus for at least 4 years. There is nothing new and revolutionary about it.

What is new on this campus is that the Central Council finally got going and did what it set out to do this semester. I can assure you that John Oleski had nothing to do with initiating, planning or conducting this semester's evaluation--not that he didn't have the opportunity. He was asked several times in the past weeks to help staple forms and conduct evaluations and refused.

When I took over the chairmanship of this Committee, the only information on course evaluation that was available to me was that gathered by Paul Wilhelm, the previous chairman. I would like to ask Mr. Oleski what happened to all the vital information on course evaluation that the Curriculum committee gathered under his chairmanship? Why did the Committee have to start from scratch this year? Is that there was no work done on it or is it that Mr. Oleski didn't choose to give his information to those that followed him? What's this I hear about Mr. Oleski "standing above factionalism?"

Dorothy Cooke
Chairman, C. C.
Curriculum Committee

Do-nothing

Dear Editor,

Although John Oleski was elected chairman of the Curriculum Committee in April 1970, and held that position until October, it should be noted that he did not so much as call a meeting while chairman. In other words, for seven months, Oleski did absolutely nothing as chairman of the Curriculum Committee. I know, because as a Central Council member, I finally had to give up in my attempts to get Oleski to call a meeting or even to do anything for that matter.

I replaced do-nothing Oleski as chairman of the Curriculum in October, and in doing so, started from scratch. Oleski was not involved in initiating the course evaluation system nor in getting the D-F option on the referendum as erroneously stated in the Current on April 22.

In addition to sporadic attendance at Central Council meetings, Oleski attended only 1 out of 8 Executive Committee meetings. His frequent absences were instrumental in causing a lack of quorum and a subsequent delay in initiating important legislation.

I find it amusing that Oleski should complain about an ineffective Central Council when his own record could hardly have been worse.

Support the strike

Dear Editor,

A national moratorium on "business as usual" has been called for May 5 to demand the end of the American military presence in Southeast Asia. The UMSL Committee to End the war is calling on students and faculty on this campus to join this protest by stopping all normal activities and participating in alternative activities aimed at protesting the war. The day May 5 was chosen to commemorate the students killed last year at Kent and Jackson State.

People are discouraged by the failure of previous efforts to stop the war. They ask what is the use of doing the same things over and over when the war goes on anyway. This pessimism overlooks what the anti-war movement has accomplished over the past six years. While we have not been strong enough to stop the war, we have increased every year in both numbers and militancy.

Last year's demonstrations after the invasion of Cambodia were by no means a failure. While Congress did not act to end the war, they took bolder steps than they had previously. Furthermore, the removal of American troops from Cambodia after six weeks, the refusal to send American ground troops into Laos in great numbers, during the recent invasion, all are a result of opposition to the war.

Last spring this opposition took over many forms. ROTC buildings were burned, students rioted in the streets, other students leafleted their surrounding communities with anti-war literature. Some people gathered signatures on petitions and others went to Washington to lobby against the war. What was impressive was no one activity but the intensity and totality of the effort.

This year new constituencies have joined the anti-war struggle and old constituencies have moved to more militant positions. Vietnam veterans have become one of the most eloquent voices in opposition to the war. Organized labor has begun to actively oppose the war as workers have become caught between rising prices and growing unemployment.

The April 24th marches in Washington and San Francisco attracted greater numbers and diversity of participants than ever before. The upcoming demonstrations in Washington will be the most militant to date as large numbers of people are committed to engaging in civil disobedience.

While the ranks of the anti-war movement are filled with new people, it is important to demonstrate that the old people are still here. By repeating the same activities, we will show support for the new people in the struggle and encourage others to join in the future.

Lyndon Johnson stated that he was not going to be the first President to lose a war. Nixon has repeated this many times. It is unlikely that any president, acting on his own, is going to end the war in Vietnam. Congress will not act on its own to end the war. The Supreme Court has consistently refused to rule on the constitutionality of the war. While many people have the power to end the war, nobody wants to take the responsibility of doing so.

One thing is clear. The people of this country must end the war or it will go on indefinitely. It is only through continued actions against the war that sufficient strength will be mustered to end it.

Political strikes at universities are one way of contributing to that strength. Last year's hundreds of strikes in colleges and high schools were effective. Repeating these activities is important and will add to the pressures to end the war now.

Golfers set record, lose match

The Rivermen golfers set a new school record in their April 23 match with Eastern Illinois University at Charleston, Illinois--and lost.

"Eastern also set a school record," explained coach Larry Berres, "unfortunately, their record was better than ours."

Led by Doug Solliday's 70, the Rivermen carded a total of 375, six strokes better than their performance last year at Western Illinois.

Eastern, meanwhile, finished with an impressive 365, one stroke under par. Their leading golfer, Gay Burrows, finished with a 68.

"The best three performances of the Panther golf team," said Eastern coach Robert Carey, "have come against the UMSL squad."

"We bring out the best in them," added Berres.

Monday the Red and Gold chal-lented St. Louis U. and Bradley University in a three-way match at Forest Hills, home of the Bills. They got past both, 405 - 407 - 434, with the Braves copping second.

"We got off to a bad start," commented Berres, "cinched up our belts, and, with the help of the god of golf, went to work."

Solliday received the most aid from the link diety, finishing with a 78. Gene Dodson and Robin Brewer finished with 79 and 82.

"I told the team it was poetic justice," Berres said, "that after playing so well and losing at Eastern, we would play so poorly and win at Forest Hills."

The Rivermen were dealt a blow over the weekend when regular Ron Meyer was injured while working at Glen Echo Country Club. He may return this weekend.

This would be a bad weekend for Meyer to miss. The team takes their 9-3 record against Southern Illinois-Edwardsville at Green Trails Friday and meets SIUE, Southeast Missouri and Western Illinois in a quadrangular meet Saturday.

The linkmen can lose only three more matches if they are to reach the 17-6 season record hoped for by Berres.

With the help of Berres' god of golf, maybe they can, at that.

Netmen win fourth

It's been a long time coming, but the UMSL tennis team, long the poor relation on the Riverman sports scene, finally has won 4 matches.

They brought their record to 4-4 with victories last week at the expense of Concordia Seminary and Westminster College.

"And three of those four we lost, we lost by one point," said coach Gene Williams.

The coach had set a .500 mark as a goal before the season began. "That's still our goal," he emphasized during a break in practice this week, "anything over .500 is gravy, anything over .500 will simply put us ahead of the timetable I had set down."

Williams went on to cite three reasons why his charges might get ahead of this timetable.

"First of all," he said, "we're better organized this year. Secondly, the players themselves have improved and thirdly, they've improved because they've worked harder."

"The players want to win," he went on, "and, if they pull together, we can come close. This is necessary, if we don't hang in there, forget it."

The team will compete this weekend in the Washington University Invitational.

Rivermen downed by homer in tenth

Rivermen third baseman Tom Fleming scales the fence at Concordia Seminary to snare a foul ball. Fleming made the catch to end the third inning, but Concordia went on to win the contest 6-5.

"This was really a strange game," was the only comment that Riverman coach Arnold Copeland had after the 6-5 loss to Concordia Seminary, last Tuesday.

Consider this:

The Rivermen blew a 5-1 lead, scoring 5 runs on 8 hits in the first 5 innings. Then they could only manage one hit in the next 5 turns.

UMSL hurler Dale Westerholt was cruising with a 2-hit, one run performance until the sixth inning, when he was tagged for 3 hits and 3 runs. Relief pitcher Doug Hebert gave up the tying run in the sixth and the winning run, a leadoff homer by Concordia shortstop George Schroeder in the bottom of the tenth.

And, last but most assuredly not least, Rivermen shortstop Rick Zweifel was called out on strikes in the bottom of the ninth. Nothing too extraordinary, right? Wrong. Zweifel wasn't in the batter's box at the time.

It happened like this. Ray Finke and Doug Hubert had reached bases on walks, there were two outs, and Zweifel was hitting with a 2-1 count. The delivery from Preacher pitcher Jim Schnackenberg appeared high, but the ump called it a strike. Zweifel strongly disagreed and took his time returning to the box after stepping out in disgust. He took so much time, in fact, that the ump told Schnackenberg to throw, called the pitch a strike and called Zweifel out.

The ensuing argument resembled Armageddon. Zweifel had to be strapped by his teammates, as he wanted to get at the umpire. Copeland carried the argument from there, but, of course, to no avail.

In any case, the Rivermen rally was stifled. They couldn't score in the top of the tenth, managing only a Joe Munich single.

In addition to being the victim of one of the strangest acts by an umpire that this writer has ever seen, Zweifel hit a one-out homer in the fifth.

UMSL marked three of its five tallies in the third. Catcher Roy Middleton, who usually hits well at Concordia, tripled to left and was brought home by Westerholt's ground rule double. Westerholt, in turn, scored when Zweifel, who had 2 RBI's, beat out an infield single.

The Rivermen shortstop then stole second and went on to third when the catcher's throw to second was wide. He scored when third baseman Tom Fleming singled to left.

The Rivermen collected single tallies in the fifth, on Zweifel's homer, and in the sixth. In that frame, centerfielder Ray Finke walked, stole second and scored on a single by Joe Przada.

Hubert, who took the loss for the Rivermen, hurt himself in the sixth when he took over for Dale Westerholt. Schroeder was on first, having reached on a walk. The second pitch Hubert threw was wild, allowing the runner to scam to second. Concordia left fielder Bob Kriefall then stroked a grounder that Zweifel picked up not more than three feet from the bag at second, which would have been the classic double play. Instead, Schroeder wound up at third and later scored on a grounder that bounced over Zweifel's head.

"I don't know if we can rebound from this one," said Copeland. "This is definitely damaging to the team's morale. I had hoped to win the rest of our games, but now I just don't know."

In contrast, the Rivermen were in high spirits after taking two from Arkansas State Saturday. In the opener, the Red and Gold shut out the Indians 3-0 on a fine 2-hit performance by Bill Binsbacher. Bill fanned 10 in going the distance to run his record to

The Rivermen had to battle from behind twice in the nightcap, which they won in extra innings, 4-3. Left fielder Bill Haberberger tied it at 2-2 with a leadoff homer in the bottom of the seventh. The In-
