he spite of this united effort, however, Cantrell outlined one paramount problem—that of the need for spare. The St. Louis campus abows this need, he said, more clearly than the other campuses as it is just springing up.

The lack of space is clearly manifested in the enlargement of classes. Cantrell besided to confirm that the quality of education would directly be affected but he did question why the lack of space has not had a worse affect than it has at present.

Needless to say, there is a lack of soosey for the improvements that need to be made and Castrell confirmed that if something was not done about the availability of manay that the "business community would airwafe suffer."

"Young people find to incentive to pursue their profession if there are not enough facilities to pursue their education," he said. Castrell stated that the Univernity Administration had taken just about every step to got around the problem of money except limiting enrollment. If worse comes to worse, apparently, there will not be much more of a choice but to cut down on the number UMSL was not the only campus on the agenda. The tour started with Columbia, followed by Kannas City and Hulin, and ended with St. Louis.

COMMENTARY: Editorials and Opinions

A bad example

The recent defeat of the proposed amendment to the Missouri constitution which would have legalized parimutuel wagering on horse-races points up the basic difficulty confronting any progressive or innovative legislation which happens to incur the wrath of the various religious denominations wielding considerable influence in this state.

Although the horse-racing amendment registered an impressive victory in urban areas like St. Louis, St. Louis County, and Kansas City, the measure was overwhelmingly walloped in the Bible Belt area of outstate Missouri.

Really, an inspirational triumph for the forces of goodness and light!

However, unless we read the signs incorrectly, this is just the beginning. The smoke had hardly cleared from the showdown over the horse-racing issue when Rev. Edward J. O'Donnell of the St. Louis Review, the weekly newspaper of the archdiocese of St. Louis, penned this editorial:

"The defeat of the enabling legislation for parimutual betting on horse-racing presented many interesting and unique political alliances. How long has it been, for example, since Governor Hearnes and Supervisor Roos have found themselves on the same side in any dispute Justas interesting was the marshalling of Protestant religious leadership in opposition to the constitutional amendment.

"The anti-betting forces marshalled an impressing array of bishops, presidents and pastors stating their opposition to wagering. We find nothing improper with this procedure. It is the function of religious leadership to stress the moral principles in which it beership to stress the moral principles in which it beprotestant opposition to the amendment was instrumental in its defeat.

"We hope that Catholics learn a lesson from the anti-wagering campaign. For a number of historical, sociological and ethical reasons a number of Catholics see something inappropriate in church membership and church leadership fighting in the arena of legislation for the principles in which it believes. Abortion is an obvious example. Catholic philosophy and theology see abortion as an attack on human life, but there are those who begrudge religion the right to express this philosophy and to use appropriate legislative means to protect their beliefs by law. Or again, Catholics, among others, have a tendency to lobby in favor of freedom of choice in education. Some who are Catholic and some who are not see this as meddling in areas where church leaders and church members should not be

"Church pressure for or against legislation considered a matter of morality is srong only when the means used are pressure tactics. When churches use their proper facilities of communication and argumentation to convince the public of the rectitude of their position, they properly, fulfill their function as churches and as members of a democracy." It is hardly surprising that so many political leaders, of both parties, stood four-square in opposition to the horse-racing amendment. Once the religious leaders had branded the measure as a tool of the devil, etcetera, it had become politically expedient to denome it in turn.

However, the fact that they succeeded in their aim is all the more reason to stress that a bad example was set and should not be allowed to go any further.

In this context, there is more at stake than the loss of a source of revenue which the state could ill afford to turn up its nose at.

Rev. O'Donnell finds "nothing improper with in procedure," but we do. When a clergyman renders his opinion on an issue, particularly on an issue with strong moral overtones— and especially when he speaks from the pulpit— his opinion necopilities no redutor. Whether the clergyman says, so or not, the idea that he has somehow been inspired by God must figure to some extent in the thinking of his audience. While we would not categorically deny the existence of divine inspiration, it still has not exist the continuous continuo

With this example so glaringly obvious, certain pending legislation relating to the abortion laws seem doomed to a similar fate at the hands of religious voters--not only Catholics, although they constitute the significant anti-abortion lobby--convinced that they must vote against any such innovation lest eternal damnation overtuke them.

With that kind of ominous consideration in mind, there must necessarily be some element of "pressure tactics" involved in any "church pressure for or against legislation considered a matter of moral-

How can Missourians hope to make progress when religious leaders are ever-ready to venture into any fray intent on imposing their own concept of righteousness upon their less enlightened neighbors?

Clergymen should restrict the use of the pulpit to its proper role, that of tending to the souls of their flock. This preoccupation of theirs with the preservation of such legislative vestiges of purtanism does a real disservice to the image of organized religion, which seems determined to identify itself with an inability to adapt to the twentieth century.

And then you wait — and wait — and wait.

But there is a company that starts college graduates in decision-making jobs with responsibility. You don't waste half your working life with company introductions. You have the opportunity to supervise and motivate people as well as make decisions.

The program is tough to get into and even tougher once you're in.

We call it the *"Initial Management Development Program."

The company is Southwestern Bell — and we'll be on campus October 18.

It's high risk with high reward. Look into it.
