Curators approve fine arts degree

Nursing school established

Earl Swift

A bachelor of fine arts degree at UMSL was approved by the University of Missouri's Board of Curators at its monthly meeting held in Rolla July 25.

In addition, the board approved the establishment of a completion program in nursing here and the creation of a master of education in special education degree.

The creation of the bachelor of fine arts degree (BFA) capped five years of planning by university officials, according to Sylvia Walters, chairperson of the art department.

The degree is intended for students who have obtained associate's degrees in practical arts through the St. Louis Community College. The two-year UMSL program will supplement their junior college training in three emphasis areas.

"I'm thrilled," Walters said. "This has been too long coming. Students have been asking for something like this for years."

Walters said that the program will be available to students already attending this university, provided that they meet the degree's requirements.

"People from UMSL will be able to take the introductory courses, then, for the most part, they will transfer to one of the community colleges for their sophomore years," she said. "They'll return to UMSL to finish the program their junior and senior years."

"One of the reasons we turned to a two-year program rather than a four-year program was that we simply don't have the facilities for a four-year program."

Walters said the degree will feature three areas of emphasis—design and graphic design, painting and printmaking—and that, "we hope to have one in photography in the near future."

The program will not require the hiring of additional staff immediately, she said. "It all depends on whether this really takes off the ground, as we expect it will."

Assembly hears bylaws, discusses Urban 13

Cheryl Keathley

A proposal establishing bylaws for the Student Association was given its first reading at the group's July 27 meeting.

The Association also discussed the bylaws proposal and approved the seeking of funds for UMSL's possible hosting of an Urban 13 conference later this year.

Dan Crone, Student Association vice president and chairperson of the group's Bylaws Committee, read the proposed operating rules, which were drawn up by a committee appointed at the Association's June meeting.

Amendments and debate of the bylaws proposal will take place at the next meeting in keeping with the new student government constitution.

"I think the only problem will be with the attendance and proxy requirements," Crone said.

During the reading of the bylaws, the question of absences was brought up for discussion by Assembly member Phil Boone. He said that it was his feeling that a member absent, but having a proxy, should not be penalized in the same manner as a member without one. The bylaws proposal reads "no more than three absences or three proxies, or any combination thereof are allowed during a term (one year) of the Assembly."

"Any member who exceeds three absences or proxies is automatically expelled from the Assembly," the proposal reads.

"We've operated the whole summer without bylaws," Crone said. "They're not really necessary. Crone said, however, he feels an attendance requirement is necessary."

"People will come if student government is doing something. You can't force people to come," Crone said.

He said he could not foresee how the group's members would alter that section of the proposal. If members do not take it the way it is he would consider a constitutional amendment lowering the quorum of 50 percent plus one members present to help conduct "legal" business, he said.

"It's a good, rough start," Steve Ryals, Student Assembly chairperson said before Assembly members.

At the next meeting, rescheduled for Aug. 17, Assembly members may vote on whether or not to accept this proposal.

In other action at Sunday's meeting, a motion was approved that a "budget and detailed bid be submitted to the University of Houston" so that UMSL might be considered for hosting the second Urban 13 Conference.

UMSL, along with 12 other urban commuter schools, sends student representatives to the conference, which was started last year.

Presently no bids have been made for the hosting of this year's conference. Bids must be submitted by Aug. 7.

"I think it's a very worthwhile experience for those who plan and attend the conference," said Yate Sanders, Student Association president.

He and Mark Knollman, last year's student body president, attended last year's conference, which was held in Houston.

A show of Assembly members' hands displayed interest in the idea, which Sanders said could be successful with proper funding through reserve monies that could be available for such a use as a "one-time, special event."

"It would be great for the image and enrichment of the institution," Sanders said.

The Assembly also approved proposals made by UMSL officials to renovate the University Center's snack bar and cafeteria.

The University Center Committee will meet with Chancellor Arnold B. Grobman July 31 to review and approve these plans and begin renovation procedure.

In other business before the Assembly, Sanders gave a report on the last meeting of the Associated Students of the University of Missouri (ASUM), a

Residents find heat relief here

Cheryl Keathley

Searing mid-month temperatures caused the establishment of a 24-hour heat treatment center for one week in UMSL's University Center.

The facility, located in the southern portion of the cafeteria, was set up by the Red Cross July 14.

As temperatures stayed in the 100s earlier in the month, about a dozen people per day sought relief at UMSL, including elderly persons and families with small children.

"We were happy to cooperate with the Red Cross, and we'd be happy to do it again," said Bill Edwards, director of the University Center.

The Red Cross paid for food, made available through the University Center's food services, and used its own volunteers to staff the facility.

Cots were brought in for those who spent the night and transportation was provided by the Red Cross. The organization encouraged those using the service to return to their homes when conditions made such returns possible.

During the eight-week summer session, the university operates on a four-day week and air conditioning is usually turned off during the weekends in an effort to save energy. Edwards said, however, that there was relatively little added expense in keeping the facility cool 24 hours a day.

"I'm sure the people who were there thought it was (a success)," said Charlotte McClure, the center's assistant director.

The University Center was one of four heat treatment facilities operated by the Red Cross during the heat wave.

The facility closed after rains caused temperatures to fall July 21.

Emphasis area started

A new historical agencies emphasis area in the Master of Arts in History degree has been announced. The new program, a result of cooperation between UMSL and a number of local historical agencies, is the only program of such a comprehensive nature in the greater St. Louis area.

Course work, beginning in September, will include conventional historical research, museum collection and display, historic preservation, site interpretation, and historical agency administration. The program will supplement classroom study with experience in area agencies.

Pulitzer papers here

The Thomas Jefferson Library has acquired the microfilmed papers of Joseph Pulitzer, former editor and publisher of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and the New York World.

The papers, spanning the years 1897 to 1958, contain information on political history, domestic and foreign problems, and the role of the press in the development of public policy, and correspondence, memos, and other writings.

The papers are now available for public use.

Pumphrey appointed professor emeritus

Muriel Pumphrey, a retired UMSL social work professor, has been granted the title of professor emeritus by the university's Board of Curators.

Pumphrey is an internationally-renowned pioneer in the areas of ethics and history in the field of social work. As the first member hired in the social work program, she was instrumental in the development of a degree program and the creation of a department of social work at UMSL.

As recipient of a Fulbright-Hays award, she taught in Norway in 1978. She earned her A.B. from Oberlin College, Ohio and her Doctor of Social Welfare from the New York School of Social Work, Columbia University.

Chancellor plans Asian trip

UMSL Chancellor Arnold B. Grobman plans to travel to Hong Kong, the Philippines, Taiwan and Thailand to attend educational conferences and establish exchange student programs beginning Aug. 14.

The three-week trip will begin in Hong Kong, where Grobman will speak with officials of the University of Hong Kong, one of two public universities in the British crown colony.

Grobman said that he will attempt to set up a one-for-one student exchange program with the school, classes at which are taught in English.

From Hong Kong, Grobman will fly to Thailand, where he has been invited to lecture on American higher education at Chian Mei University.

Grobman and University of Missouri President James C. Olson will meet in Manila Aug. 22 for a conference of the International Association of Universities.

The two will stay in Manila at the 1,000-delegate conference until Aug. 31, when they will fly to Taipei, Taiwan to reconfirm an exchange agreement made with officials there on an earlier trip.

Grobman said his attendance at the conference is presently tentative: The chancellor's wife, a professor at St. Louis University, is in the hospital.

Degrees

created in the last two years have been created with the supposition that they'd be needed in this program," she said.

The degree will substantially further the department's offerings in practical arts. Currently, students may obtain only a minor in applied arts, which will go into effect this fall. Practical arts classes have been offered at UMSL for about three years.

The degree must be approved by the Coordinating Board of Higher Education before it can be offered. "We're offering the classes, but we can't give the degree until we have CBHE's approval," Walters said.

In other action, the curators approved the establishment of a completion program in nursing at UMSL, which will open to students in Fall, 1981.

Curators approved the formation of a bachelor of science in nursing degree at their April 25 meeting.

"This latest action of the board approves the administrative unit to run the school," said Arthur MacKinney, vice chancellor for Academic Affairs.

"What that authorizes us to do is to hire a dean, and we're working on that. I believe that the deadline for us to have received all the applications is in late August.

"Once we've hired a dean, he or she will begin to hire staff for the school," he said.

Like the BFA, the nursing program will be a completion curriculum based on work completed by students in junior colleges or hospitals. Only registered nurses will be eligible to enter the school.

There are no plans to enlarge the school to a four-year program, according to MacKinney. "It looks like the community college is perfectly capable of mounting a good two-year program," he said. "Also, the hospitals in the area have their own RN programs."

"We're really happy to see this approved," said Lawrence Friedman, chairperson of a committee that studied the program. "We're looking forward to seeing it start. The only other programs of this type in the area are in private institutions and they're quite expensive."

The committee, according to Friedman, studied and made recommendations on the program for two years. "It's only one item on this committee's agenda. It's a health committee," he said, "and now we'll be looking into other course areas in the medical field."

The board also approved the formation of a master of education in special education at UMSL.

"It would be most accurately termed as a change from an emphasis to a program," MacKinney said.

"We now have it as an emphasis area," said UMSL Chancellor Arnold B. Grobman, "but not as a degree. Many students who have graduated with that emphasis have found that they can be better placed if they have the degree itself."

student lobbying group.

The board met July 19 in Columbia, where the main topic of discussion was staff reorganization.

Effective Sept. 1, the position of executive director will be eliminated, and the post's duties will be assumed by the group's legislative and program director.

This change will bring an estimated salary savings of $14,000, which can be used in other underbudgeted areas, Sanders said.

A voter registration drive will be conducted by ASUM Sept. 16 and 17 at UMSL, he said.

The board and staff will also attempt to host a speakers' circuit here this year.

The staff is also preparing drafts of legislation that ASUM might find sponsors for next session. Sanders said that this will be the group's first attempt to seek sponsorship of its bills.

These bills will include those for a student curator and majority rights laws for 18-year olds.

The next ASUM meeting is scheduled for Aug. 23 at 11am at UMSL.

In additional Assembly business, Chuck Gerding, a junior majoring in business, was appointed Student Association treasurer by the 13 members present.

Sanders also reported on the Programming Board's activities. "The board has experienced a slight delay, since only one member showed up at the last meeting," he said.

So far dates have been set for one concert, two theater productions and two major lectures.

A possible movie series is still in the planning stage, he said.

Sanders reported that the chancellor has approved all reserve monies allocations requested for student organizations, recommendations on which the Student Activities Budget Committee submitted earlier this year.

'CPA Review' offered

A review course for candidates preparing for the certified public accountant's examination will be held at UMSL beginning Aug. 19.

"CPA Review," an 11-week course taught by a six-member faculty, is structured to cover auditing, theory and practice, taxation, business law, and other test areas. Four simulated exam sessions are included in the preparation schedule.

Students may enroll for all portions of the 22-session course, which will be held twice-weekly from 6:30-9:30pm through October 29 in the J.C. Penney Building. For information about registration and fees, contact Clark Hickman at 553-5961.

'Androcles' roars its way into childrens' hearts

Daniel C. Flanakin

The lights grow dim. The music gradually decrescendos to nothing. A crowd of about 200 (approximately 90 percent kids) anxiously awaits the opening of the University Players' summer children's show, "Androcles and the Lion."

Although the show began about ten minutes past the scheduled starting time July 18, it was well worth the wait.

After the cast came out to say hello to the children, Kirk Dow, who would later appear as the Lion, came out and told the audience a little bit about each of the characters. Then, the fun began.

Most of the production's humor was built around sight gags. Liz Peterson, making her debut as a director, did a marvelous job setting these gags up. She did, however, have a very strong cast to back her up.

Kirk Dow, as the Lion, did a super job. Although he gave the kids a scare when he entered, roaring, from the back of the theatre, he sang and danced his way into their hearts with the message, "Roaring is a great way to show the world how you feel."

Jesse Russell did a magnificent job as Androcles. His uncanny ability to portray both the rebellious slave and the repentant slave within seconds of each other was the highlight of the show. His soft shoe number with Dow at the end of the show, however, left something to be desired.

Michael Oestereich was good as the aging Pantalone, Androcles' master. His voice and his mannerisms left little doubt in anyone's mind exactly what kind of character he was playing.

Guy Niere, who played the role of the Captain, was very good as the boastful, arrogant type. His "pleading" lines at the end fell somewhat short, however, of what could be expected.

Steph Hook and Corinna Kurth were good as the young lovers, Isabella and Lelio. Hook (Isabella) was especially good as she and Androcles tricked the Captain into discarding his uniform and sword. While Kurth (Lelio) was a bit too pretty to play a male role, she pulled it off rather convincingly.

Some of the highlights of the show were the search for the stone in the garden with the gold underneath it, the chase scene involving the Lion and Androcles to the music of the "Pink Panther" and a hysterical exchange between Androcles and Pantalone and the Captain imitating lions.

While the performances were good, the work behind the scenes was equally well done. Jason Wells' scenery design was absolutely spectacular and the crew (sorry, but there are too many to name them all here) did a good job of construction. The costuming, done by Carol Enns, was also very good.

Amidst the steady stream of humor, there were several statements made to the kids which were very important. There were two which were especially poignant. When the Lion got a thorn in his paw, Androcles could have taken the opportunity to run away, but instead he turned around and said, "When someone is hurt, you cannot run away."

At the end, after the Lion and Androcles met in the ring and realized that they were old acquaintances, Pantalone and the Captain were put to shame, while Androcles and the Lion were set free. Then, the Lion proclaimed, "The world was made for all—equally."

Overall, the play was very well done. The kids in attendance seemed to enjoy it immensely—and that really is the bottom line. This probably was one of the better summer children's productions that the U. Players have done in recent years.

John, a graduate of the San Francisco Art Institute, produced many of these works as a result of his interest in his studio roof and the human mouth as components of landscape.

The entire show consists of large black and white photographs. None are titled, so all conjecture is left to the viewer.

John is adept at using shadows and subtle shade differences in his pictures. And, due to the size of the enlargements, the grain of each picture is especially visible, adding effect to the shading. One can see the components of each shade of gray and how they differ and fuse into one another throughout his works.

One piece that shows this particularly well contains, among other things, a piece of sheet music, a dangling electric cord, an iron, and some sort of smooth round pebbles or beads. John's play with substance and shadow, light and dark, sets up a definite sense of rhythm and one wonders if it is not connected to the sheet music somehow.

Some of the pictures are rather conventional: There's one with a huge floating paintbrush above a horizon, and another with a huge floating lightbulb in what appears to be a star-filled sky, above a craigy landscape. Cute, but conventional.

John drops the conventionalism when he gets to his mouths, however—at least in all but one shot. The shapes most of the mouths form are amazingly intriguing. Curves, dips, and angles found about the human mouth are endless. The one shot, though, reminds me too much of my orthodontist.

All in all, L.R. John presents an interesting show. He possesses a good technique in using the major elements of the black and white pictures; the shades of gray between black and white. And his theme of "Roof 'n Mouth" is definitely unusual, and deserves to be viewed.

Gallery 210's hours are from 1-5pm, Monday through Wednesday, and 1-9pm Thursdays. "Roof 'n Mouth" can be viewed until Aug. 14.

St. Louis men's group confronts violence and related problems

Daniel C. Flanakin

How would you react if your wife, girlfriend, mother or daughter were raped or otherwise violently abused? You may not know where to turn for help. But, there is one group that can help—RAVEN.

In November of 1977, six men decided that men needed to take a more active part in stopping abuse against women. In order to confront the reality of male violence against women, the men formed Rape and Violence End Now (RAVEN).

The six original members of the group were Craig Norberg, Don Long, Bill Stults, Harv Leavitt, Tom Fox and Joe Zimmerman.

Norberg, who has been the real organizer from the beginning is a part-time engineering consultant. He spends about 30 hours a week coordinating RAVEN, completely on a volunteer basis. Leavitt and Fox are therapists. Long is a historian and Stults is a photographer. Zimmerman no longer works with the group because he moved out of town.

The men met at a conference on Men and Masculinity in St. Louis. Their first training came from the Women's Self Help Center, where several of them have friends. They were drawn together through common experiences of violence from their own pasts either direct or indirect. Norberg and his new-found partners realized that the need for safe shelter for women was only half of the problem; violence in men had to be confronted and a way had to be devised to help these men. So, RAVEN was formed in concept.

According to RAVEN's Flight, a newsletter put out by the organization, "there are no distinctive characteristics which would set apart the rapist or woman abuser from other men. A tendency to act out inner feelings of insecurity and fear in a violent way is all that is found . . . The decision not to abuse, not to rape can only become an individual moral statement."

With this thought in mind, RAVEN established a telephone counseling line for men in a crisis (533-3372). The individual telephone contact with a peer counselor is supplemented by individual and group counseling based on self-help.

RAVEN now has 20 trained counselors, of which eight are professionals in the field of counseling. The other 12 peer counselors have gone through a 30-hour training program which was designed in cooperation with the Women's Self Help Center and the St. Louis Abused Women's Support Project.

Most of these 20 volunteers are telephone workers, but some of them work with the support groups. These are meetings for men seeking help. The meeting times may change, but these support groups are a very important part of what RAVEN is all about.

"Eighty men have been seen through one of our forms of counseling since September of 1978," Norberg said. "Our preference has been group work because we believe that men sharing with other men provides the forum for the roots of our individual problems with violence."

RAVEN deals basically with two types of situations. The first involves the man whose mate has left him. Feeling violent, he needs to turn to or on somebody. The other type of case involves the man who has a loved one raped or violently abused. The counselor must work with him to help him understand the changes that she is going through and the changes that he himself is going through.

In addition to the telephone hotline and the counseling sessions, the group also has made 70 speaking engagements over the past two years, because, as Norberg says, "One of our primary goals is for the public to understand that men need to take a more active part in ending violence against women."

Those interested in helping RAVEN can contact Norberg at 533-3372.

Hudson has high hopes for women's soccer

Jeff Kuchno

With high school soccer for girls having gained in popularity recently, UMSL has decided it's time to introduce the sport to the college level in the form of a club team.

Ken Hudson, who will serve as coach of the team, believes that generating interest in women's soccer at UMSL will be no problem.

"About 35 girls have already expressed an interest in playing," said Hudson, who is also UMSL's field hockey coach. "We're going to work out on Mondays and Thursdays, beginning Sept. 4."

Of course, the team will not be recognized by UMSL as an official sport, but that status may be shortlived.

"We're going to put a proposal to the Athletic Committee to make girls' soccer a varsity sport next year," explained Hudson. "There's already close to 80 colleges that have girls' soccer."

According to Hudson, approximately 25 high schools in the St. Louis area currently offer girls' soccer. He believes that the sport will continue to flourish on both the prep and college levels due to the limited expenses involved.

"Because of expenses, girls' soccer is ideal of UMSL," Hudson said. "We're going to limit the expenses as much as possible. There will be little traveling, we already have uniforms, and we should be able to borrow soccer balls from the men's team most of the time."

Should women's soccer gain varsity status at UMSL, it could conceivably lead to the demise of field hockey, which has been an intercollegiate sport here since 1974.

"Field Hockey is not as popular in the Midwest as it is in the East," explained Hudson. "Soccer is more popular around here and it's less expensive to finance."

UMSL is scheduled to begin an abbreviated season near the end of October. Among those on the schedule are Maryville, Lindenwood and Harris colleges with Washington U. and U. of Missouri-Rolla two other possibilities.

As for the players, Hudson is high on Peggy Wedermeyer of Ritenour and twins Jan and Joan Gettemeyer. Wedermeyer led the area high schools in scoring last season, while the Gettemeyers starred for the St. Blaise junior amateur team. All three will be freshmen at UMSL this fall.

Wedermeyer and the Gettemeyers should form the nucleus of a strong club, but Hudson explained that recruiting more top-notch talent will be the toughest part of his job.

"Most of the money will be used for scholarships," he said. "If I can get the girls to come here, that's half the battle."

The other half of the battle could be Hudson's coaching ability on the soccer field. Fortunately for UMSL, he has plenty of experience in that capacity.

Hudson has coached the Buchholz Mortuary amateur team since 1973, and in 1978 he led the women's team to the Missouri State Khourey League championship.

Suffice to say Hudson has the experience and the willingness to make women's soccer prosper at UMSL. "It should be interesting," he says, "and I'm really looking forward to it."

Five women athletes cast lots with UMSL

Five women athletes, including three highly-touted softball players from the St. Louis Community College at Meramec, have signed letters of intent to attend UMSL. Women's basketball and softball coach Joe Sanchez announced last week.

Outfielders Geri Rosen of Ladue and Debbie Johnson from Parkway West, and infielder Judy Panneri of St. Elizabeth High School were key performers for Meramec a year ago. Rosen and Panneri, who were named to the All-Region District 16 team, and Johnson all batted over .300.

Nancy Hatler, who was 15-3 last season at Lindbergh High School, will pitch for UMSL next spring. Hatler is a righthander pitcher with an impressive fastball.

In another announcement, Patty Sutton from Meramec and Bayless High School has expressed her intent to enroll at UMSL. Sutton, a catcher, batted .308 for Meramec last season.

Lehr named interim S.I.D.

Dan Lehr, a UMSL junior majoring in Speech Communications, has been named interim sports information director, UMSL athletic director Chuck Smith announced last week.

Lehr replaces Pat Sullivan, who resigned two weeks ago to accept a position as assistant director of UMSL's Office of Public Information. Lehr served as an assistant to Sullivan during the 1979-80 school year and will fill the post until a full-time director is named.

and is a Junior College All-American in both softball and basketball.

Sanchez also helped himself for the upcoming basketball season with the signing of Theresa Davidson, a 6-foot-1 center from O'Fallon High School in Belleville, Illinois. Davidson averaged 15 points per game and led the Belleville Athletic Conference in rebounds.

Smith to coach all-stars

Chuck Smith, UMSL's athletic director, will serve as a coach for an American all-star basketball team that leaves for a three-week invitational European tour this week.

Smith will share coaching duties with George Spencer, director of the International Basketball Service, based in Cincinnati Ohio, and Paul Frey, long-time successful coach at Elder High School in Cincinnati.

The American team will be made up of recent high school graduates, ages 18 and 19, who Frank Cusumano of DeSmet High School has accepted a basketball scholarship and signed a letter of intent to attend UMSL, head basketball coach Tom Bartow has announced.

Cusumano, 6-foot-1 and 170 pounds, averaged nearly 15 points per game and led the state of Missouri in assists for DeSmet's 22-9 club that finished fourth in Missouri's 4A state playoffs.

"Frank plays with a lot of intensity," Bartow said. "He is known for his hard work and desire to improve his ability. His strongest suit is his ability to perform in the clutch. That was demonstrated by his winning overtime shot against Pattonville to put his team in the state tourney this year."

Cusumano was named this spring to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch North All-District second team and was selected to the All-Suburban first team by the Inner City Black Athletic Association.

"Frank was the quarterback for our team this year," DeSmet coach Rich Grawer said. "He is one of the hardest workers and fiercest competitors we've ever had in the DeSmet program. He is a smart player. He knows his limitations and plays within that framework. He was very instrumental in our 32-0 (4A state championship) season (in '78-'79)."

Since UMSL already boasts many talented backcourt players, Cusumano has no misconceptions about becoming a starter in his first year. Still, he is looking forward to being a member of the cagers for the next four years.

"I'm pleased to be a member of a super Division II team," he said. "Last year, I played against guards from the Suburban South and this year, I'll be playing against guards from the Metro Conference. It's going to be a tough transition to make, but all I want to do is learn from the super guards (William Harris and Reggie Clabon) and hopefully somewhere down the line I can contribute."

Cusumano is the sixth recruit announced for the 1980-81 campaign by Bartow.

will enter various colleges and universities this fall as freshmen on basketball scholarships. Many of the players will be from Ohio, although other midwestern players will be involved.

The American squad will play a majority of its games in Yugoslavia. Additional games are scheduled in Italy and Germany.

In addition to the games, Smith will be involved in conducting clinics for coaches while in Europe.
