Awareness Week Dispels Myths About Disabled

FETCH: "Tackle" retrieves a cane for his partner, Joe, in an appearance April 6 at University Center for Disabled Awareness Week. Support dogs help the handicapped by: retrieving dropped objects, pulling open heavy doors, "standing and bracing" to help someone up from a fall, pulling a wheelchair up a ramp and other tasks specifically designed to help their partners. Support dogs are chosen for their intelligence, high desire to please, predictable behavior and willingness to readily form an affectionate bond with humans. "The purpose of Disabled Awareness Week is to make the non-disabled campus population aware of what it's like to have a disability," said Disabled Student Union President Pat Hall.

The eighth annual Disabled Awareness Week was held here April 4-8.

"People's attitudes are pretty good, but a lot of people are still kind of uncomfortable with us," Hall said. "People have preconceived notions about disabilities. I'd rather they would ask, than go around with the wrong assumptions."

There are 166 disabled students receiving services through the university's special student programs, including 11 students who are confined to wheelchairs.

"There are a lot of inconveniences," Hall said. "I think the university has gotten into the habit of doing just enough to meet the code. They meet it, but they don't beat it."

"I'd like to see every building with an accessible door," she said. "Did you ever try to get out through the library doors when the wind is blowing in? It's hard enough for an able-bodied person, but for someone with a disability or a wheelchair, it's almost impossible."

"We could use two elevators in the buildings. When they break down, wheelchair students have to miss class that day," Hall said.

According to Marilyn Ditto, administrator for special student programs, the university has logistic problems because of the terrain of the campus grounds.

"The entire campus used to be a golf course. Buildings are built on a hill. Sometimes you enter on the second or third floor because buildings are cut right into the hills," she said.

"All buildings on campus have accessible entrances, but they are not always exactly as close as you need them to be," Ditto said.

A new entrance from West Drive was added this spring to the Social Sciences and Business Building enabling disabled students to directly enter lecture halls there. Disabled students can now be seated in the front of the lecture halls instead of only in the back. The new entrance was previously an emergency exit.

According to Ditto, plans for the new science building include electric doors and an elevator which would also serve the adjoining Benton and Stadler Halls.

Plans for the new addition to the library at this time do not include electric doors, but Manager of Planning and Construction William Watkins said that he plans to have a meeting in the coming weeks to discuss handicapped requirements for the library.

"We still have a chance to make it better," Watkins said.

The library addition will include a public elevator.

Construction on the library will eliminate some of the most centrally located parking available for handicapped students. But, according to Ditto, this space includes only eight prime parking spots. The other spots are inconvenient, she said, because they are located on a hill.

New spots for handicapped parking are scheduled to be added to parking lot C, near the J.C. Penney Building.

SABC Adds Funding For Student Groups

by Tony Laurent

The Student Activities Budget Committee (SABC) held appeals hearings last Friday and voted to award a total of $9,549 in additional funding to 10 different groups.

These hearings gave individual student groups the opportunity to argue their cases for wanting more money than the committee had granted them on March 25, when initial allocations were made. Only seven of the 32 eligible groups actually appealed.

The budget committee also heard the cases of three groups that had been ineligible because they submitted their budgets late.

The SABC added $5,569 to the University Program Board, bringing the UPB's total budget for 1988-89 to $70,569. This figure is $19,031 less than the UPB had requested and $8,431 less than they received for the current school year.

J.J. Stevens, who represents the UPB at the hearing, said the programming board was appealing because it had received $24,600 less than it had requested.

"It takes a lot of time and money to bring a comedian or a band to this campus," Stevens said. He pointed out that if UPB was forced to operate with their original allocation, cuts would have to be made.

"Bands may have to be cut to a bi-monthly basis," Stevens said.

European Unity Discussed

by Francisco J. Pelaez

Dr. Joseph Lee, an economic historian from Ireland, spoke on "The Federal Republic of Germany and World Affairs" to a group of students and faculty in the McDonnell Conference Room on April 1.

Lee — professor of modern history at the University College in Cork, Ireland, and advisor to the Irish government on European historical and political matters — was introduced by Dr. John Gillingham, professor of history at UM-St. Louis. Lee is an expert on the history of German industrialization and of Ireland in the 19th century.

Lee emphasized the role of the Franco-German integration as the kernel around which the integration of the whole of Europe is being generated.

He pointed out that France and Germany were perfectly integrated in advance of the latest European Economic Community (EEC) negotiations, and that Britain now does nothing but "beg for the German embrace" — after having tried to wreck this integration for years.

A Day In The Life Of A Disabled Student

by T. George Crupe

7:00 a.m. Bundled against the elements, I roll out to embrace the gray day. It's too early for the apartments' maintenance crew to have shoveled the walks, so I plow my way out to the parking lot, leaving behind the tracks of a machine: no footsteps of a man leave I, for I ride a wheeled chair of automaton. Where I once strode 6 feet 3 inches tall, I now sit 4 feet 2 inches.

Because of my diminished height and surrounding steel throne, I am unable to sweep the snow off my van, so I must start it from within and wait for the windshield to warm. Slowly, the chain-driven lift unfolds from the back of the van and lowers to rest on top of the five-inch snowfall.

Somehow, I must try to jump the extra five inches to get on the lift. Slipping and sliding, I maneuver my 200-pound chair into position for a running start. I shoot forward and manage to get my front wheels up on the lift but can go no farther: I try to back up but do not succeed. My wheels spin in both directions: I am stuck — I curse the powers that be.

I wait for some form of assistance as the bitter February winds rob my body of its life-giving heat. My poor circulation, due to paralysis, becomes life-threatening as the possibilities of hypothermia increase. Ten minutes go by: my teeth are chattering, and if I could feel my toes, I'd swear they were numb. A fellow commuter finally stops and helps me onto the lift; I head into the relative warmth of my van.

8:00 a.m. It has taken 25 minutes to warm the windshield enough to melt the snow off so I can see. I leave for the campus which is only 5 minutes away.

8:05 a.m. I arrive on campus to find that the parking lot in front of Stadler Hall has yet to be plowed — I curse the powers that be.

8:15 a.m. I finally make it to Clark Hall for my 8 a.m. class, only to find that my instructor didn't make it because of the snow. The class has been cancelled. I curse the powers that be and hang out in Clark Hall in an attempt to warm up before my 9 o'clock class back at Stadler.

8:45 a.m. I roll out into the ravaging winds, cringing against the minus 30-degree wind chill, and head across the commons. I divert from my original course on the way back and find myself on a walkway that has only been cleared the width of a snow shovel — wide enough for foot traffic, but not for my mobile prison. I plow ahead anyway, making slow progress, until even that ceases. For the second time this morning, my wheels spin in both directions: again I am stuck — again I curse the powers that be.

Three Vying For Top Post In Student Election

by Kevin Kleine
managing editor

The most powerful student position on campus will be filled in the upcoming Student Association elections April 18 and 19.

The president and vice president of SA chosen will have the responsibility of representing all student interests on this campus. Along with representing students, the SA officers will act as liaisons between students and the administration.

The three candidates, Jerry Berhorst, Scott Lewis and Steve Wolfe, have some similar concerns, such as:

- Improving communication with the campus
- Reforms in the financial aid office
- Campus safety and lighting

They all differ in their approach to the campus though. Berhorst and his running mate, Laurel Baker, take an approach of promoting the university in the community and in the state. "UM-St. Louis is drastically underfunded," Berhorst said. "We want to work with some of the legislators to try and push funding through."

Berhorst maintains that his first priority is communication with the students. He plans to accomplish the task by using the computer and software in the SA office to produce a weekly newsletter to be circulated around campus.

Recruitment and retention of minority students is another facet of the Berhorst campaign. He plans to travel to the inner city to bring the message of the university to the disadvantaged.

"It will be similar to the Bridge Program the university has," Berhorst said. "We're just going to promote the campus. We want to develop a program to hit at least five or six inner city schools and make the transition easier."

Focusing on the needs of the average student and mostly the mass opinion of the students are some of the main concerns of Lewis and his vice presidential candidate, Scott Anderson.

"Let's help some people here that are struggling through a lot of problems right now," Anderson said. "I think the whole year that I've been here, I haven't gotten anything from the student association asking my opinion."

"One of our main goals will be to learn how the whole campus feels about issues, not just how a select few feel," Lewis said.

Lewis and Anderson feel that the entire student body should control the decisions of student government. They plan to implement opinion polls and heed the veils of the general student population. They have no uneasy feelings about going against the grain of the administration.

"We're going to go in there with our ideas, be flexible to theirs (the administration), but we will be representing the students," Lewis said. "If the students have an item they feel strongly about, I would have no qualms whatsoever about butting heads with the administration."

"I think you'll find that we're more the maverick type rather than the puppy dog style of the present administration," Anderson said. "If there is an issue of student concern out there you'll find that we are going to fight for it."

Wolfe, who has no running mate,

Vote For Courage, Vision, Confidence

Busted. Those wooden signs I wrote about last week, the pale yellow ones with black lettering on one side, well they don't belong to the Student Association. They are the property of one Stephen Bratcher, BMO. They were a gift to Steve from a previous SA exec who accepted them from an even more previous SA exec, who accepted them from even more previous SA execs. You get the picture. Definitely not an SA resource, personal property of the reigning president by right of conquest. Chattel.

After reviewing the available campaign literature, and some casual conversation with some of the candidates vying for the top dog position in student government, I found that my initial choices for SA officers were right on the mark. I'll still vote for Lewis and Anderson. The "Sticker Twins," as they are casually referred to around campus have a good idea of what student government should be about.

For beginners, they are willing to take the time to man the office and be available to act on student complaints or compliments about whatever is bothering students about life on this campus. Now, let's not misconstrue this into a criticism of the present SA officers. Steve Bratcher quit his job to devote full attention to SA business. Robbyn Stewart didn't quit her job, she was promoted to another position of greater importance and responsibility. Therefore, she just couldn't devote that much time to the SA. She gave all she had though. We're all real proud of Robbyn, just sad that she couldn't give the SA the commitment it deserves. Too bad she didn't make it to more Curator's meetings. Maybe assessment wouldn't have come so far.

Do you think that Baker will find herself in the same situation that Stewart did?

My initial impression after talking to Lewis and Anderson is that they want to see a clear separation of student government from university administration. The two upstarts think that the administration needs prodding on certain student issues. Like automatic doors on the J.C. Penney building so that handicapped students have better access. Like more lighting on the campus at night so that students feel safe walking from their classes to their cars. You know, the simple stuff that can be done if only someone has the will to make them happen.

Lewis and Anderson seemed to think that the students should be polled about fee increases and have the opportunity to vote in referendums when fee increases are proposed. A fairly safe and democratic approach to governance I'd say. On the really hard issues, Lewis and Anderson had no problem distinguishing the difference between a university administration initiative and a student government initiative. For instance, the "Sticker Twins," readily perceived that it was the job of Student Affairs to handle minority recruitment and retention. After all, there is a special person in Woods Hall and a special house on Natural Bridge Road and a devoted office staff to handle that administrative program. You get the feeling that Lewis and Anderson could be depended on to say no to the administration when it comes time to challenge the next fee increase.

Lewis and Anderson know what it's all about. And it's not a game of "Footsie" with Marge's team, or burnishing resumes. It's about having courage and vision and confidence. vote Lewis and Anderson on April 18 and 19.

Controversial Material Defended

Dear editor:

We the coaching staff of the UM-St. Louis Forensic and Debate Squad welcome the feedback and criticism of Bethany Cockroft, a student at Evangel College, who attended the state championships here February, 26. However, we feel compelled to respond to some of the judgements she made in her April, 7 letter to the CURRENT about some UM-St. Louis performances there.

Ms. Cockroft's judgement in all instances fly in the face of how reasonable, expert critics have consistently judged UM-St. Louis performances throughout the 1987-88 season. Indeed, UM-St. Louis forensics has broken the school record by winning 115 awards this year--awards that were given on the basis of superior points awarded by expert faculty critics in the field of speech and debate.

Not only does the overall tone of the letter misrepresent the UM-St. Louis program, but so do Ms. Cockroft's specific remarks. While she is certainly correct that delivering an after dinner (humorous) speech on flatuation at a banquet may be inappropriate, we must point out that the UM-St. Louis student who performed the speech was asked to do so as a result of winning a state championship in after dinner speaking. The duo interpretation performance of "Blood Moon," which portrays the consequences of the social reality of date rape, not only won a state championship, but placed at every tournament at which it was performed during the Winter Semester. The prose selection of "The Vision," which symbolizes the social reality of violent incest, not only placed third at its first outing, but received first place rankings in every round of the prestigious Pi Kappa Delta Tri Provincial Tournament held March 3-5 at St. Mary's College in San Antonio, Texas. Throughout the year and not just at states, both performances met and exceeded the criteria for literary merit used by the faculty critics qualified to make such judgments.

While the after dinner speech topic has been changed to one more suitable for national competition, the UM-St. Louis squad continues to polish "Blood Moon," "The Vision," and many other exciting selections for performance at the National Forensic Association's National Individual Events Tournament at Tempe, Arizona April 21-25. The squad's practice sessions, each Wednesday at 1:30 pm in Lucas Hall, are open to all students, faculty and members of the UM-St. Louis community. We invite all to visit these sessions, or contact either of us at 553-5485 for information about other sites and times we will perform. Explore UM-St. Louis Forensics, and see what all of this "controversy" is about!

We are very proud of all of the forensics students here at UM-St. Louis, and stand behind their fine performances--and their right to uncensored, free speech.

Assessment: Risking Educational Integrity

Dear editor:

At last someone has dared to criticize publicly the "assessment" program instituted at Missouri higher education institutions at the insistence of Governor Ashcroft. And it brings a smile to note that this cogent criticism in last week's CURRENT letters came from a student.

In fact it is precisely this type of capability-critical thinking, clear communication--which we as instructors try to nurture in our students, and which is least likely to be measured in some simplistic "objective" test of academic achievement at the University.

How does one test for art or music appreciation, awareness and tolerance of foreign cultures, civic responsibility, or the ability to conduct meaningful research on important problems? As instructors, we already attempt evaluations in each of our courses, but the idea of gauging progress over an entire university education is ludicrous.

This idea fits with the growing tendency to hold teachers responsible for the performance of students. Visiting North African university administrators recently were astonished to learn that such "logic" has been applied to the UM campuses.

"Assessment" originated in Missouri with a small college's effort to rejuvenate its faculty and gain statewide notoriety. The Governor and other public officials then chimed in to promote their own reputations for "educational reform." The one missing element in these reforms, of course, is money and the "T-word."

While no one would oppose better definition of our educational goals, and diligent efforts to meet them, politically dictated assessment is a fraud. If we were being well paid, we might afford some time to satisfy political desires for meaningless data. But with the likelihood of salary "increases" in the range of 2-3 percent (with inflation running at over 4 percent), how can faculty members in good conscience take time from substantive teaching, research, and service to participate in such nonsense?

Very little has been left to the faculty at Missouri's public University but its pride and educational integrity. If we give these up, we have eroded the University's role in society and its political immunity.

Thanks again to Amy Adams Squire for having the courage, so notably lacking among others in the State's university and colleges, to say in essence that the emperor in Jefferson City has no clothes.

Communications, Accessibility, Involvement, Platform Proposed

Dear editor:

As candidates for President and Vice President of the Student Association, we Jerry Berhorst and Laurel Baker feel that we possess the qualities necessary to run an effective student government, and we ask for your support in the upcoming elections on April 18th and 19th.

We propose a platform that will strive to accomplish several goals:

1. To improve communications between the student government and the students themselves. We will expand the current Student Association Newsletter to include more information about the day to day operations of the SA, while also more effectively utilizing the student advocates to poll students as to their concerns about a variety of student issues.

2. To promote improved accessibility on this campus. This will include longer library and computer services hours, better campus security through improved lighting and an increase in student patrols, more readily accessible facilities for handicapped students, and longer financial aid hours for evening students.

3. To more actively participate in legislative affairs at both the local and state levels. This can be accomplished through greater student government lobbying in both the campus community, as well as in Jefferson City. We will actively pursue issues that will better the typical UM-St. Louis student's life while attending classes on this campus.
4. To personally develop a camaign to promote better minority recruitment and retention on this campus. We will help to form a joint effort between the Student Association, the Associated Black Collegians, the International Student Union, and several other campus organizations, to organize an effort where members of these organizations would go into the poorer areas of our city, county, and the East Side, to promote the qualities of the University of Missouri-St. Louis, while at the same time helping to ease the transition from grade school to college for these disadvantaged youths. We would provide assistance in filling out financial aid forms, properly applying for admittance to the university, and then informing them of the many resources available on campus to help them out academically, such as the math and writing skills lab, and the Center for Academic Development.

5. Finally, to help initiate a campaign to increase student involvement. We would push for more student government participation, as well as, for more active participation in recognized student organizations.

These five goals are what our campaign is all about. Qualified, capable leadership is what is required of this office. We hope that you will give us your vote next week so that we may make use of our abilities to the best of your benefit.

Candidate Wolfe Calls For SA Change

Dear editor:

I'm Steve Wolfe, the UM-St. Louis Students for Action candidate for Student Association Assembly President. I am running against the current administration by running a grass roots campaign. I want to get students interested in the election and out to vote.

Unlike the other candidates running for office, I have been on the Assembly for three years. I have also been involved in other student activities on this campus. Presently, I am vice president of the school's Television and Cinema Production Club as well as co-sponsor of "UM-St. Louis Connection," a cable show about the university cablecast on American Cablevision. I have also served on the University Senate and the Student Services Fee Committee. For my campus service, I was honored with the 1987 UM-St. Louis Student Affairs Award and listed in the 1987 "Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities."

I believe that the Assembly should work for the students, not just for the egos of its members. Some of my goals for the Assembly include increase student interaction among student groups, increase campus facilities hours to meet the needs of the students, a standard advising system, improve the quality of campus facilities and increase student retention.

I believe in student input into campus affairs. It is your school and you should have a say in its operation. Unlike other years, if I am elected, I believe in a diversity of opinion in the Executive Committee in order to get a wide range of opinions. Also, I will strongly encourage each organization to send a representative to the Assembly, a right that is granted to recognized student organizations that isn't used by many of them.

Student input into the university starts by voting. It is your duty to vote and make your voice heard on this campus. It does make a difference who you vote for. Vote in the upcoming election.

I hope you will vote for me, Steve Wolfe, as your next Assembly President. Put knowledge and experience into action. Vote for Steve Wolfe for Student Association Assembly President on April 18 and 19.

Steve Wolfe

Pickens Addresses Concerns At Evening College Council

Campus Police Chief John Pickens addressed the Evening College Council on Monday, April 4, on campus security concerns during weekend and evening hours.

Pickens was a guest speaker before the council, which was meeting for its third time this semester. The meeting was attended by Philip Neale, president; Robbyn Stewart, vice president; Anita McDonald, acting dean of the Evening College; and seven members at large.

Pickens appeared at the meeting in response to Evening Council questions regarding campus security. He fielded questions from council members on topics such as garage lighting failures, campus lighting improvements, emergency phone placement and general building access.

Pickens announced the police department's plans to survey emergency-phone locations, looking at possible expansion of the number of locations, as well as replacement of those phones that have been stolen.

He also discussed publication of a student information flyer discussing the basics of personal safety and crime prevention.

Following Pickens' presentation, council members addressed the subject of the 1988-89 budget and prepared an appeal for the student activities funding committee, which reduced appropriations from 1987-88 by almost 19 percent.

An increased budget would be used to introduce a series of speakers at 5 p.m. seminars, send council members to leadership training workshops, and expand the Monday-Tuesday Koffee Klatch to the south campus.

The council voted unanimously to draft a statement in support of the proposed Honors College Program, recommending that the modifications to the current Pierre Laclède Honors Program include offerings for evening students.

The council also prepared a slate of nominees for officers for 1988-89. Vacant offices were president, vice president, recording secretary, corresponding secretary, and treasurer.

Elections were scheduled to be held on Tuesday, April 12.

Music Department Hosts Contest, Wins Honors

The UM-St. Louis Department of Music hosted the annual Singers' Auditions sponsored by the St. Louis Chapter of the National Association of Teachers of Singing on Sunday, April 11.

Singers and singing teachers from almost every school in the metropolitan area attended. Students of Dr. Mark Madsen, UM-St. Louis coordinator of voice and opera studies, received top honors. They entered eight of 14 divisions and won seven first-place awards and one second-place.

The first-place awards for Madsen's students went to: Kristen Huxhold, upper division high school women; Edward Hartfield, upper division high school men; Julie-Ann Aguhop, sophomore women; Leonard Stagoski, upper division college men; Jane Boschert (currently Miss St. Louis) upper division college women; Scott Niskanen, intermediate adults; and Beverly Stewart, semi-professional adults. Patricia Scanlon won second place in the advanced college division.

Students of UM-St. Louis' Jan Parker who placed were: Sister Augustina Miller, second in the intermediate adult division; and Cathy Miller, second in the lower high school division.

"I feel that this really shows that we have one of the best vocal music programs in the St. Louis metro area," Madsen said. "We have a few excellent students that will move on to professional careers."

Other winners included: Kim Boucher, first place in lower division high school women, a student of Every day, thousands of college students ready, aim and fire their fingers down their throats to make themselves sick. It's called purging, and while it may seem like the easy way to look healthy, it's actually a sure way to become very ill.

Left unchecked, bulimia can cause rotten teeth, dehydration, a ruptured stomach or esophagus, and kidney failure. In its latter stages, it can cause the heart to skip beats, until one day it skips for good. But there is hope.

Through support group counseling, the professionals at St. John's Mercy Medical Center can help bulimia and anorexia victims find relief from their guilt, depression, and years of loneliness. They can show them how to turn food into nourishment instead of an obsession, and how to start feeling good about themselves again.

At 9 a.m. on the third Saturday of every month, St. John's holds free meetings to discuss eating disorders and their symptoms. To find out more about the meetings, just call 1-800-22ABTEC, or 569-6898 in Missouri.

Everyone is welcome and there are no questions asked, because the people there know first hand how devastating bulimia and anorexia can be. And they won't be pointing fingers at anyone.

AWARENESS

The bus, snow removal from the bus stop on the south side of Natural Bridge Road near the university entrance has been a problem, because, according to Ditto, the Village of Bel Nor does not consider snow removal a priority.

In 1984 UM-St. Louis adopted and implemented an auxiliary aids/services policy which was designed to help accommodate the increasing numbers of disabled students requesting special services.

The executive order includes the assessment of handicapped students' need for auxiliary aid.

"Most students end up getting

Helping hands are instantly there. My fellow students, with jokes about four-wheel drive and snow tires, ask what they can do. With two students in front pulling and four in back pushing, we travel the length of the sidewalk like some bizarre dog-sled team.

It crosses my mind that I may not be the only disabled student having difficulties this morning. I wonder how the blind, using a cane, can "see" with snow covering everything, how the person on crutches keeps from breaking another leg or ankle.

8:58 a.m. The warmth of Stadler Hall envelops my shivering frame as I slide up to the elevator. A sign on the elevator door tells me that all my efforts of the entire morning have been for naught: the elevator is out of order — once again I curse the powers that be.

After making arrangements for class notes on the day's lecture, I head for home. I only had two classes today.

9:10 a.m. I head back out into the frozen tundra. The ground crews have finally gotten around to plowing this end of campus and have blocked all the curbs with snow. It takes several attempts, but I finally succeed in breaking through one of the snow-barred curb-cuts.

9:40 a.m. I have made it back home but have caught a chill from exposure to the harsh elements. I must get back into my heated waterbed in order to bring my body temperature back up to normal. As I lie there shivering, I curse the weather and the snow; I curse the university for not calling off classes or at least putting them on a snow schedule; I curse the faulty elevator that has been broken on at least half a dozen occasions this semester alone; and finally I curse my alarm clock as I drift back into the solitude of slumber.

more services than they would request because they were not aware of what was available," Ditto said.

Among the special services provided by the university are: sign language interpreters; specially made furniture; Braille textbooks and textbooks on cassettes; alternative testing procedures, including extended time for taking exams; and priority registration.

Ditto said that in cases where the auxiliary aid is not available from an outside source, the university in most cases provides the necessary aid.

wants to make the student groups on campus more interactive and expand the amount of social activities here.

"The groups are spread out and don't know what's going on between each other," Wolfe said. "In order to have a better university experience, you need to have groups that know what's going on."

Wolfe wants the student groups

FUNDING

When questioned about the UPB's lack of revenue generating events, Stevens replied: "Few people will come back to this campus to an event if they have to pay... (But) we're aiming at a 50-50 split between free and revenue generating events."

EUROPE

Lee stressed that "security provides the cutting edge of European integration" and that the reunification of East and West Germany depends on internal developments in the Soviet Union. His point of view was that "the U.S.S.R. has the right to security but must relax the whip somewhat."

In answer to a question by Dr. Francisco Carenas, UM-St. Louis professor of modern foreign languages and literature, about the form of the coming European federation, Lee said that it was premature to discuss it, but that it on campus to help foot the bill for events such as Mirth Day due to the recent cuts that have been handed down from the Student Activities Budget Committee. Mirth Day is in danger of elimination or severe cut-backs if additional funding is not provided.

Wolfe also feels that the students need more access time to the library and to computer rooms.

"This is a commuter campus and students have to come here at various times of the day and they need to have access to the facilities," Wolfe said.

A larger part in the government of the campus is what Wolfe is seeking for the SA.

"We are the university," Wolfe said. "The university wouldn't exist without students. Therefore they must have an active role in curriculum, including class scheduling," he said.

Wolfe proposes that a long-range schedule of courses be published to more effectively allow students to plan their schedules.

"After someone comes here we need to be concerned with the whole person; academically, financially and socially."

The SABC also voted to give $450 to the PanHellenic Council, which had requested $700 but was refused funding at the March 25 allocation meeting.

The Jewish Student Union received $180 and the Malaysian Student Organization received $250.

Both groups had submitted their budgets late.

Other groups and events which received new monies on appeal were: Greek Week, an additional $700, for a total of $1,150; Evening College Council, an additional $1,000, for a total of $6,000; International Student Organization, an additional $500, for a total of $4,000; and Television & Cinema Production Club, an additional $500, for a total of $2,000.

Midwest Model United Nations was denied an increase, leaving their budget at $1,500. And Delta Zeta Sorority, which had requested $750, was denied any funding.

would certainly be a federation rather than a unitary state.

There is presently great internationalization of EEC education, Lee said, pointing out that, by 1992, ten percent of Western European students will be able to study for a whole academic year in an EEC country foreign to them.

Lee concluded by saying that, over the last two years, there has been, in Europe, "a shift from petty nationalistic squabbles to something better" and that the Germans were very excited about the Soviet market opening up.

After the talk, Lee told the Current about developments in Ireland.

Before the present round of murders and counter-murders in Northern Ireland, Ian Paisley, veteran leader of the Protestants, had been negotiating secretly with the Dublin government to prepare the integration of Ulster into the rest of Ireland.

Lee said that Paisley felt betrayed by the government of Margaret Thatcher and let down by his own constituency. At the last demonstration he organized, only a fraction of the people he had counted on showed up.

Therefore, accepting the inevitable, he had started a "rapprochement" with the Irish government, Lee said. Unfortunately, the recent wave of violence has wrecked this, and so the situation is back where it was two years ago, Lee concluded.

Dr. Lee has written and edited numerous books, including: "The Modernization of Irish Society, 1848-1918"; "Ireland, 1945-70," editor; "Irish Historiography, 1970-79," editor; "The Age of De Valera," coauthor; "Reflections on Ireland in the EEC"; and "Ireland: Toward a Sense of Place," editor.

the teachings of Abraham Maslow as outlined in Maslow's book "Toward A Psychology Of Being."

"The Secret Of Inner Strength: My Story" is easy to read. While informative concerning survival tactics, it is also an account of how a little known karate instructor took the advice of Steve McQueen and became an actor.

Often criticized for being a "wooden" actor, Chuck Norris has managed to become successful because of his personal style. Not unlike John Wayne, Chuck Norris embodies a certain sense of patriotism in his acting persona. His name is synonymous with a certain kind of action film that often transcends the macho-mindlessness of others in the genre (ie: Sylvester Stallone, Arnold Schwarzenegger, etc...)

The book, like many of his films are surprising. It is basically a good and honest read.

KSHE's Party Was A Disappointment

COMMENTARY

by Kris Embry
music reviewer

Local rock station KSHE 95 was once again named best radio station of the year by Rolling Stone magazine, at least for the Midwestern region of the country. To celebrate this, the station sponsored a concert at Mississippi Nights on February 24.

This "listener appreciation" party was free to all ages and featured new recording artist Peter Himmelman. Himmelman's song, "Waning Moon," is currently receiving local airplay.

I enjoy new music, and even though I knew very little about Himmelman, I looked forward to hearing him. I was so disgusted by what I witnessed, however, that I left long before Himmelman's set began.

First, it was a mistake to hold the event at Mississippi Nights, where it is difficult to find a seat unless you arrive early, not to mention the dense clouds of smoke. The show was open to all ages as well, which means security must constantly check hand stamps to assure segregation of minors.

These problems could have all been avoided had the concert been held at the Westport Playhouse. At the Playhouse, everyone can be comfortably seated and no smoking is allowed in the auditorium. Drinks are also available for those that want them.

The last free concert that KSHE sponsored, to the best of my knowledge, was Timbuk3, a show that took place well over a year ago. At the Himmelman show, we were again told that this was only one of many free concerts KSHE will be bringing to town. We heard this at Timbuk3 as well, but I don't recall seeing KSHE sponsor any free shows.

Rubes®

By Leigh Rubin

The purpose of this show was to show appreciation for the station's listeners. I didn't come away feeling appreciated. Personally, I would have appreciated an opening band other than Big Fun, who can be seen at Mississippi Nights every weekend. They are the house band, but a person can only stand so much Big Fun.

What offended me the most, however, was the behavior of KSHE morning personality "Smash." Shash's favorite word has four letters and begins with an F. I'm open-minded, but the random use of profanity is unnecessary, juvenile and boring.

Smash, and his command of the English language, were very unprofessional, as were his tasteless attempts at audience involvement in drinking contests for concert tickets.

This material was unsuitable for a show that admitted all ages, but my main complaint was that Smash, a professional broadcaster and representative of radio station licensed to serve the public interest, would stage such a contest.

KSHE is popular entertainment for many young people in this city, and Smash used poor judgement in behavior and language.

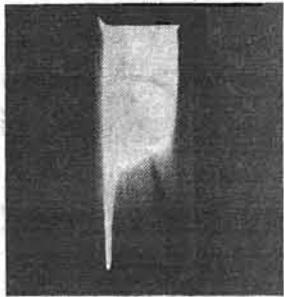

Smash, along with Rob Buttery and John "the U-man" Ulett, can be heard weekdays from 6-10 a.m. at 94.7 FM as KSHE's Morning Zoo.
